Betting On A Down Year For Stocks Is A Bad Bet

We're eight months into the year. When we opened 2016, the broader mood about markets was still gun-shy of another (crisis) shoe to drop. Wall Street was, on average, almost reluctantly, forecasting about an average year for stocks—about 8%. We're about there already. The hedge fund

Is Discretionary Macro Dead?

For decades, discretionary macro hedge funds were the most exciting (and sometimes provocative) area in global finance. They offered investors very attractive risk-adjusted returns that were not correlated to the stock market. In recent years, their performance has lagged the stock market and the discretionary manager landscape has been read »

Billionaires Sold Apple For A Reason

Yesterday was the deadline for all big investors to submit, to the SEC, a public snapshot of their portfolios for the quarter ended June 30.

On that note, as we've discussed, this information is covered hot and heavy by the media. You often see headlines like these (actual headlines from yesterday): "Activist hedge fund ValueAct takes read >>

Gold ETF Speculators Brace For Speed Bumps

Gold has been on fire in 2016. While the commodity rallied at the start of the year as stock markets sold off, it more recently enjoyed its "safe-haven" status in the wake of the "Brexit"-fueled broadmarket plunge in late June. Additionally, the Federal Reserve's hesitancy to raise interest rates has helped boost the malleable read »

George Soros Still Bearish on Stocks, Sells Some Gold, Why Investors Should Care George Soros made his fortune, over the last few decades, from his prescient macro views on markets. When Mr. Soros speaks, people listen. Mr. Soros is still bearish on stocks and sold some of his gold. In his quarterly 13-F filing, Mr. Soros bought a lot more bearish puts on the stock market and sold some of his gold positions. Remember, this read »

3 Ways To Boost Trading Performance

As an active trader, there are three key factors of your strategy to which you need to pay close attention. There's no holy grail in trading, but tweaking and maximizing these three things can get you pretty damn close to one. We refer to these factors as the three pillars of trading performance:Pillar No. 1 - Edge read » GuruFocus, Contributor
